

WAR DEPARTMENT IS READY TO SPEND BIG SUM AT M'PHERSON

Major General Leonard Wood, Chief of Army Staff, is Making Estimates for Construction of New Buildings

PRESENT PLANS CALL FOR EXPENDITURE OF $500,000

Congressman William Schley Howard Says He Expects No Trouble in Getting the Necessary Appropriation

BY RALPH SMITH.

WASHINGTON, D. C., Sept. 6.—That the war department is contemplating an expenditure of half a million dollars in the improvement of Fort McPherson here today, when it was learned that Major General Leonard Wood, chief of staff of the army, is engaged in making estimates for the construction of additional buildings at the Atlanta Post.

The estimates upon which General Wood is engaged will be submitted to Congress for consideration at the regular session, beginning in December, and pending for the money will be made in the army appropriation bill.

Congressman William Schley Howard, a member of the house military committee and today he expressed confidence that the estimate of the war department for the improvement of Fort McPherson will be carried for in the supply bill, which the military committee will frame.

General Wood plans an expenditure immediately of upwards of half million at Fort McPherson, said Mr. Howard today. "I expect to encounter no serious obstacle in getting this appropriation, and the department accounts for former estimate."

Mr. Howard declared that General Wood has determined definitely to establish a large post at Fort McPherson, and that the estimate he is now making will include the cost of the post.

"An act of Congress is required to make a large post of Fort McPherson," said the Congressman. "The war department has the money with which to improve the post."

TWO IMPORTANT CITY ELECTIONS FOR THIS MONTH

So-called New Charter Gotten Up By Council Goes Before Voters, for Approval or Disapproval on September 24

CITY PRIMARY WILL BE HELD ON SEPTEMBER 30

One Councilman Is to Be Nominated by Each Ward, and Three Aldermen Are to Be Nominated by City at Large

BY RALPH SMITH.

During the present month the voters of Atlanta will be called on to participate in two important elections affecting the city government.

On September 24 they will pass on the new city charter gotten up by the general council and enacted by the last legislature with the referendum provision. On September 30 they will elect one councilman and three aldermen.

If a majority of the voters participating in the election of September 24, approve the new charter, it will go in effect January 1, 1914. If a majority disapprove it, then the charter becomes a dead letter.

The difference between the so-called "new" charter and the present charter is so slight as to hardly justify calling it a new charter.

FEATURES OF CHARTER.

Summed up briefly, the features of the new charter are: a board of health, hospitals and charities, and a board of trustees to administer the city's affairs. The board of health, hospitals and charities, as at present, is a board of trustees to administer the city's affairs. The board of trustees to administer the city's affairs. The board of trustees to administer the city's affairs.

REPUBLICAN TARIFF CHARGES ANSWERED BY SENATOR SMITH

In Speech on Senate Floor Saturday Night, Georgian Replies to Republican Allegations on Wilson Tariff Bill

BILL DID NOT CONTRIBUTE TO 1893 PANIC, HE SAYS

Senator Smith Shows That 1893 Panic Was Due to Several Causes, Least of Which Was the Wilson Tariff Bill

(BY RALPH SMITH.)

WASHINGTON, D. C., Sept. 6.—Senator Howell Smith spoke in the senate tonight in answer to the charge by the Republicans that the Wilson tariff bill of twenty years ago contributed to the panic of 1893.

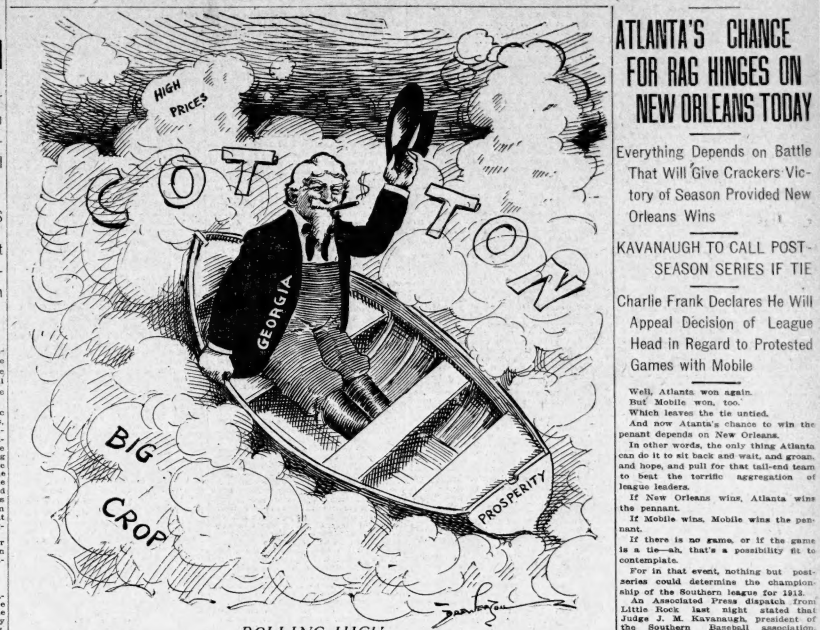

Senator Smith showed that the panic of that year was due to several causes, one of which was the unsettled conditions growing out of the Baring failure. The high tariff law of that time had prevented imports, thus reducing the receipts of the government, while excessive appropriations exhausted the treasury resources. At the same time the silver purchase law had resulted in the exportation of great quantities of gold and the silver coinage law had prepared for an issue of government bonds when Mr. Cleveland was inaugurated on March 4, 1893.

The worst of the panic of that year was over by September and the Wilson tariff bill was not passed until the latter part of 1894.

SENATOR SMITH'S SPEECH.

Many times during this debate senators on the Republican side of the chamber have made the claim that the passage of the Wilson tariff bill contributed to the country to financial distress. They have appealed to the history of tariff legislation to sustain the claim. They have sought to show that the reduction of tariff rates would result in the country with foreign products, and they have urged the enactment of the tariff bill as the result of tariff reduction.

CRACKERS STAND OR FALL TODAY

SCHOOL BELLS TO SOUND ONCE MORE ON TOMORROW MORNING

Authorities Expecting Attendance This Year of Fully 25,000—One That Will Set Record for Atlanta

Tomorrow morning approximately 25,000 children will leave their homes all with a common destination—school. The bells of every public school in Atlanta will ring at 8 o'clock and mark the opening of the school year.

The school session of 1913-14 will be the longest in the history of the city. While the office of the superintendent of education is ready at all times to receive entrance cards, it is not until the school opens that the full number of pupils can be ascertained.

On the first day there will be no studies only the assignment of each child to his proper class and then the teachers will give a few words of formal instructions from the teachers. The sessions will last hardly more than an hour and a half at the longest, the classes being dismissed early in order to allow the pupils to get up town and buy books. Where it is possible lessons will be given out in order that the real work of the session may commence Tuesday morning.

Examinations were completed Friday and all teachers have heard the annual address of Superintendent William A. Rison. Every detail is in readiness for the opening and there can be no possible hitch.

As was the case last year some of the schools will be crowded. One improvement has been made in the establishment of a school on Moreland avenue where the old school has been moved. This will serve in a way to relieve the congestion in the main Park. Edgewood school and Highland avenue schools. The others will have the same room as last year and be as badly or worse crowded than before.

A number of the yards and playgrounds will be crowded. One improvement has been made in the establishment of a school on Moreland avenue where the old school has been moved. This will serve in a way to relieve the congestion in the main Park. Edgewood school and Highland avenue schools. The others will have the same room as last year and be as badly or worse crowded than before.

The new school on English avenue is well informed and will not be ready for use for a month or an even longer time. It is really needed and every effort is being made by Mr. Rison to have it ready for occupancy in order to take care of the large number of children in that vicinity.

According to the superintendent the proposition of taking care of the negro children in the largest one and yet far removed from solution. The facilities for schooling them in north Atlanta are very poor and the negroes are appealing to the board for relief. The board finally succeeded in helping out matters to a large extent by making arrangements with the county authority to take care of 250 or 350 children.

MISS JESSIE WILSON WEDS ON NOVEMBER 25

Second Daughter of President Will Have Thirteenth White House Wedding

(By Associated Press.)

WASHINGTON, Sept. 6.—The marriage of Miss Jessie Wilson, second daughter of President William Howard Taft, to Mr. John H. Wilson, of New York, is to take place at the White House in Washington, D. C., on November 25, 1913. The wedding was made from the summer home of the president, Mr. Woodrow Wilson today.

This thirteenth wedding in the White House is to be an afternoon affair, although in the past the president's daughters have been married in the morning.

Miss Wilson has been for some time in the White House and has been given her consent to plans that will result in an affair being held in the historic mansion.

Mexican Officer Opens Fire on Americans at Juarez and Is Killed

Declaring He Would "Kill a Gringo," Lieutenant Crosses Bridge and Begins Rifle Fusillade -- United States Customs Officers Volley Back and Kill Him -- Border in Turmoil -- Troops Prepared for Serious Trouble

EL PASO, Tex., September 6.—Lieutenant F. Acosta, an officer in General Salazar's federal command at Juarez, crossed the Rio Grande international bridge this afternoon and was killed by United States Customs Inspector T. F. Jonah and Immigration Inspector Thomas N. Heffrin, after he had opened fire on them with a rifle.

He was shot through the mouth and arm and his horse, from which he was dismounted, was shot through the side. The American officers were injured. Before crossing the bridge the Mexican had remarked that he was "going to kill a gringo."

Heffrin was standing at the American end of the bridge when Acosta first opened fire on him. He fired back, and the bullet from the American's rifle struck the Mexican's head and killed him.

General Hugh L. Scott, commander of the United States troops at El Paso, ordered to the bridge following the shooting. He had with him 1,000 Mexican who had gathered on the Mexican side of the bridge.

The United States troops, notified of the shooting, were ordered to the bridge. The United States troops, notified of the shooting, were ordered to the bridge.

TARIFF BILL READY TO PASS THE SENATE

Measure Will Be Slid Through Early Next Week and Returned to House

(BY RALPH SMITH.)

WASHINGTON, D. C., Sept. 6.—After a debate extending over one month and six days the administration tariff bill was finally perfected tonight in the senate, and the ways cleared for its passage.

The bill was introduced first in the house on April 22, and was passed by the house on May 23 by a vote of 281 to 159.

The bill was referred to the Finance committee on the Senate side on June 20 and was reported to the Senate on July 11. It was then passed by the Senate on July 11, 1913.

The bill was then passed by the Senate on July 11, 1913.

BOARD TELLS HOW TO AVOID TUBERCULOSIS

Educational Bulletin Tells of Cure and Prevention of Widely Spread Disease

The state board of health is sending an educational bulletin in regard to tuberculosis telling of the cure and prevention of the disease of the first magnitude.

For over 2,000 years tuberculosis has been considered a communicable disease. Knowledge of the nature of this deadly, however, has not been a shadow of a doubt to the lower animals with tissue from a consumptive patient. In 1882, however, the discovery of the germ which causes tuberculosis was made. It is a small, rod-shaped organism, which is very easily killed by heat and is very easily transmitted in long and a human body. A little later in the same year, 1882, Robert Koch clearly demonstrated the germ which now has been known as a shadow of a doubt to the lower animals with tissue from a consumptive patient. BULGARS DESERVE NO SYMPATHY, SAYS CONSUL

Greek Consul in Atlanta Comments on "The Passive Concert" Editorial

Editor The Journal: I read with great interest your editorial entitled, "The Passive Concert of Europe," and I wish to make the following comments on the conduct of the European governments, as far as Adriatic is concerned.

It is true that this last mentioned country was won by the Bulgars with the assistance of their formerly faithful allies, the Serbs, and the indirect help of the Greeks.

It is true that the treaty of London gave Adriatic to the Bulgars. But Bulgaria of today is not the same in the eyes of the civilized world as she was at the time the treaty was signed in London.

Bulgaria has committed such crimes against ineffective inhabitants of Thrace and Macedonia, she has given so many proofs of lack of human sentiments and her inability to show any spirit of civilization, that even the most fervent friend of that country could hardly raise a sympathetic voice in her favor.

The imprint of the J. P. Stevens Engraving Co., Atlanta, Ga., upon the envelopes of millions of wedding invitations during the past twenty-five years, has made this name a household word throughout the South. Indeed, all over the United States; for this house has achieved a national reputation for its artistic productions, shipping its work constantly to nearly every state in the union.

To its thousands of patrons, it may be of interest to know that this is now the largest plant in this country exclusively devoted to this one specialty.

This result has been brought about principally by the use of the exceedingly ingenious and productive machines invented and patented by Mr. Stevens, and also by the fact that each order receives careful, personal attention and none but experts are entrusted with the

The collage is a dense assembly of baseball-related imagery. At the top, a newspaper masthead reads "The [illegible] Journal. BASEBALL". Below this, a central team photograph shows a group of players in white uniforms with "A" logos, standing and kneeling in front of a building. The word "CRACKERS" is printed in large, bold letters across the middle of the team photo. Surrounding the team photo are numerous individual portraits of players and coaches, many wearing baseball caps. Some names are visible on the portraits, such as "BILLY", "DUNN", "THOMPSON", "LOVE", "WELCH", "VOSS", "NIXON", and "HOLLAND". The background is filled with various newspaper clippings, including headlines like "BASEBALL", "GOING TO CHAPMAN", "JAPANESE CITY", "PRICE OVER", "LONG", "AGLER", "DUNN", "THOMPSON", "LOVE", "WELCH", "VOSS", "NIXON", and "HOLLAND". The overall composition is a tribute to the sport of baseball, featuring a mix of team and individual portraits, and historical newspaper text.

SOUTH NORWALK, Conn., Sept. 6.—A girl with a diaphanous skirt ended a baseball game here between the Nationals and Westports a few days ago. She stood at the top of the bleachers and was between the sun and the fielders. The latter looked, then exchanged glances and signs. A fly ball was hit. None saw it until too late, and she went as a home run. Once again it happened. This time it occurred a third time and the visiting team tied the home manager, wild with wrath, declared the game off and forfeited to the other side, though it was only the seventh inning.

Putting a winning variety crew in the intercollegiate regatta for Syracuse has brought Ten Eyck senior names up in another way. These alumni of Yale who are weary of seeing Harvard win on the Thames at New London, while the Yale experiment in coaching fell flat have suggested that the "old man" of Gtongdaga be secured to instruct the Yale crewmen. There seems little chance of that, however, or that E. J. Glanville, growing coach of the New York State team, will see the expedition to go to New London. CREMATORY NOW BURNING ALL OF CITY'S GARBAGE

Evaporation Test Will Be Made This Week to Determine Power Generated

The new crematory since September 1 has been burning all the garbage of the city, and during this week the official evaporation test will be made to determine the amount of steam power it is producing.

The daily record of the plant from September 1 to 1 inclusive was as follows: September 1, 230 tons; September 2, 240 tons; September 3, 242 tons; September 4, 230 tons; September 5, 231 tons.

By a system of high pressure boilers in connection with the furnaces, the crematory generates a great quantity of steam. Under the terms of the contract, this steam must be the equivalent of 1,500 kilowatts of electrical energy. Council's plan is to install an electrical generating plant next year and harness the steam, the electric current to be used in lighting the white way lights or for whatever purpose the city desires.

Councilman Claude L. Ashley, who is a steam engineer of many years' experience, although he does not expect the crematory to fall to burn the quantity of garbage required by the contract, 250 tons (one per day) believes that the steam power will not come up to the guarantee.

In order to determine this point, Councilman Ashley put through council a resolution authorizing the employment of an engineer to make the evaporation test, and on his recommendation Mayor Woodward appointed Frank LeSueur, a consulting mechanical engineer of Atlanta.

P. D. Canham, engineer of the De-groutier company, which company built the crematory, is still in Atlanta, having supervised the construction and now is in charge of the operation of the plant pending final acceptance of the city. Mr. Canham is of the opinion that the plant will not only generate the quantity of steam required by the guarantee, but also generate the full steam power which the contract requires.

The evaporation test will be started Monday, according to present plans, and will continue until Mr. LeSueur has satisfied himself as to the accuracy and thoroughness of the test.

LINCOLN PLAY COMES IN LYCEUM COURSE

Benjamin Chapin's Portrayal of Martyr Here to Be Shown Here

Among the new and interesting features of the Lyceum season will be the play "Martyr," which will be shown by Benjamin Chapin's company. The play is a dramatic monologue, a portrait of Mr. Chapin's own father, "Martyr," a character who lived in the White House.

As indicative of the class of Mr. Chapin's art, it is interesting to note that in one of the highest plays of the Lyceum season in America, when Mr. Chapin's play was presented for the first time at the Lyceum theatre, in New York, it was so well received that it was difficult to get it to be shown. It was so well received that it was difficult to get it to be shown.

The Lyceum season will be continued with the play "Martyr," which will be shown by Benjamin Chapin's company. The play is a dramatic monologue, a portrait of Mr. Chapin's own father, "Martyr," a character who lived in the White House.

Buckhead Man Makes Sensational Charges Against P. B. Bell, of Sandy Springs

Arrested for fighting early Saturday afternoon R. E. Cain, 33 years old, a butcher of Buckhead, told the police that his opponent in the late encounter, P. B. Bell, a carpenter of Sandy Springs, had brought two girls to Atlanta, for an improper purpose and that he was endeavoring to punish him for his conduct. The police are making an investigation.

In the meantime the two are held by the police on a charge of fighting. Patrolman Florence arrested the two on Harris street. Witnesses to the encounter told him that Cain had met Bell who was walking with a friend and that the men had immediately upon hostilities.

Georgia Verse

WOODROW WILSON'S WIDOW.
All round the world transactions prove
By every kind of test,
When Woodrow Wilson makes a move
It's always for the best.

Some critics come from North and South
And sneer at each guest,
But when they have shot off their mouth
They find his way is best.

He does his arduous daily task,
And entertains each guest,
Opinions of his helpers ask,
And then he does the rest.

The chill winds strike him from the North,
The whirlwinds from the West,
The rumbling thunders from the South,
But don't disturb his rest.

I'm glad he weighs the matter well
In his human breast,
He made it plain that "War is hell"
And world-wide peace is best.

With guiding forces in his brain,
Good motives in his breast,
We're not astonished at his reign,
Nor that he stands the test.

If all these loud war cries would cease,
All selfish feelings cease,
Accept it's plan for world-wide peace,
The whole earth would be blest.

I wish I could old Huerta see,
From the action of the past,
And cheer for great Atlanta—
The pride of Dixie Land.

From cotton field and cabin
Hear the mighty chorus swell
As we sing the songs of Dixie Ending with the "Tee-De-Dee!"

JERRY SULLIVAN

NOW GUARD AT THE FEDERAL PRISON ONCE A SOLDIER OF FORTUNE IN SOUTH AFRICA

By Angus Perskerson

HADN'T it the Klondike," said Michael Brown. "And that it's Cape Town," said Jerry Sullivan. "John Wynn said nothing, merely gave the penny a flip into the air, and caught it in his palm. "That's it," he announced. "And that it was. 'Tis how Jerry Sullivan, Michael Brown and John Wynn set out from New York city for Cape Town, and how Jerry Sullivan, through experience, altered his mind, and finally left him in a room, ready as a new room, lower at the Atlanta federal prison. "He had made himself several fortunes, only to lose them all. He had married the native in South Africa, and it was only Lord Kitchener who saved him from being hanged. "He was aboard ship, sailing for Cape Town, when he was told that the ship was under attack. "He had two medals, which were given him for his manhood in times of very pressing danger. "He had been talking, speaking as he was in his soft Irish brogue, the richest mixture of rowels in the world, you might think that Jerry Sullivan in the flash were telling you of past gallantries and of a life of more adventures. "Jerry Sullivan's mustache is as black and curling as the man of whom Mr. Kipling wrote, his eyes have the same twinkle, and even when he is upon his quiet porch just across from the warden's house you know that stirring adventures are his proper setting. "Jerry's present occupation is as a guard for the Irish potatoes and bay beans that the prison eats. But his past experience was an adventurous life in a new country, where, if you had the mind, you could knock up against old experiences at every turn. "And Jerry was always of the mind that a brisk, stirring life is the only life for a man whose blood is Irish and whose courage has been handed down to him from a long line of bold ancestors. "About twenty-five years ago, he began to feel that Kilarney, the place of his birth, while the greenest and the fairest spot upon earth, was not one in which to seek or to find adventure. So, early upon a spring morning, Jerry Sullivan packed his belongings into a red handkerchief, kissed the old folks good-by, and set out for America. "His possessions were an extra shirt or so, and three plays of Shakespeare. As the years wore on, he bought new plays and came to be a guard at the asylum upon Ward's Island. "Finally, the city was about to transfer the asylum to the care of the state, and there were rumors that employees were either to be discharged or to be reduced in salary. Along with the rumors Jerry Sullivan came upon a newspaper story about Johannesburg, and the fortune to be made there. "The effect of this story was that he and Michael Brown matched to see whether they should go to the Klondike or to South Africa. Michael, who was forty years old and had traveled into every corner of the world, was partial to the Klondike, for there he once had dug real gold from the earth. "But Michael asked faithfully by all his agreements with chance, and the Klondike or South Africa were the same to John Wynn. "So, upon the morning following the day, when John Wynn tipped the one-cent coin to determine where they should go, the three adventurers set sail from New York for Liverpool. It was then March 4, 1896. From Liverpool they went to London, from London to Southampton, and there took boat for Capetown. Immediately after touching African shore they set out for Johannesburg, where the newspaper had described gold as being thick as the sand. "They mined for eight weeks before being disillusioned, and afterwards the three of them set out for Salisbury, which is the capital of Mashonaland. But they got only as far as Tull on the Crocodile river, which means 'Silence.' The natives were in revolt, and the chance was offered for a taste of real fighting. "Jerry, Michael and John Wynn were not the sort to let such an opportunity slip. They joined a company formed by the white colonists, and for seven months fought the natives, three among one hundred white men against a thousand or so savages. But after all there were few fatalities, unless you count the several hundred natives that put themselves in the way of bullets. And yet, among those who died on one of the long marches was Billy Reese, from Dublin, for whom Jerry Sullivan, being from Kilarney, had come to feel the affection of a brother. "The death of Billy Reese was only one of the sorrows that befell Jerry Sullivan during his twelve years and six months in the African land. Toward the end of his adventure, his first wife died and was buried in Dublin cemetery, and was followed soon afterward by his baby. "PINING FOR SYMPATHY. "Then I began to pine for sympathy," he says in an account which he has written of his experiences. "Chances of employment there were none at that time, and I had no love just then for the country. For, I was after burying my wife and child in Dublin cemetery. So, I sailed the next morning from Durban, and proceeded up the coast to Delagoa Bay. "And from there he worked his way, bit by bit, back to New York city, and, nothing better offering him, set out for Atlanta to take the job of counting potatoes for government prisoners. "Now, of an evening, he sits upon his quiet porch, and imagines at times that over there, where the warden's house stands, is a clump of African brush; and that he is, again, a detective chief for the Portuguese government, or a miner digging gold by the hundred dollars worth from a South African mine. "For he has been detective chief, miner, soldier of fortune—nothing less than Private Mulvaney himself in real life. "At one time during that seven months' warfare with the natives, he and a party went up into west Matopos, a range of hills, where Cecil Rhodes is buried. Not far from his tomb, they camped for the night, sleeping with their saddles in a ring, and using the hard leather of the saddle for a pillow. About 4 o'clock in the morning, 7,000 Zulus attacked them on all sides, and the fighting lasted until midnight. Fifty-two white men were wounded, three were killed, and the dead Zulus were thick on the ground. "But Jerry Sullivan, and the two who had sailed with him from New York came through without a scratch. Later on, he was one of two survivors of a party of twenty who went upon a scouting expedition. Yet, in this instance he was wounded twice, once in the cheek and once in the thigh by the murderous spears of the natives. "TRAPPED IN THE HILLS. "The party of twenty found themselves in a cup in the hills, with natives rioted about them, closing in slowly. Their position was something like Custer's in his last fight. The Zulus narrowed their circle more and more, and a few bullets and a cloud of war spears began to fly over the heads of the twenty, and occasionally into their midst. "Now and then, one of the group of white men, crouching behind their saddles, which they used as breastworks, would drop his gun and huddle up motionless upon the ground. But Jerry Sullivan was the man next to him, had little time to give aid or thought to the wounded. Their business was to shoot as quickly and coolly as possible at any black body that showed itself in the surrounding bush. "Still Jerry could not but notice that there was little firing around him. The man at his side suddenly groaned and dropped his gun, and afterward it seemed to Jerry that no other rifle but his own was speaking. "ATTACK ON THE NATIVES. "There was a swaying and tossing of the brush ahead, and down upon him came a cloud of yelling black men, whirling above their heads spears which were as sharp as razors and as heavy as axes. The blacks swept straight over the circle of saddles, but they carried but a brief while. "Jerry Sullivan was shooting with two revolvers, and each time his finger jerked at the trigger, a black man threw up his hands, and sprawled on the ground. The natives left the ring of saddles as though they found it an uncomfortable place. But in the next moment, the bush in front of them blurred with smoke, and they returned in a still greater hurry to find that Jerry's two revolvers were as active as ever. "Upon their heels followed the relief party of whites, who had heard the firing, and had come to the aid of the score cut off in the little cup in the hills. They found everyone dead except Jerry and the man next to him, and both of these were wounded. (Continued on Page Ten)

Silver Trophy for women in the recent water carnival
at East Lake

SWISH! went the water. A coil of Auburn hair dove into a topknot, dipped out of sight.
Further down the course it bobbed under the water again, re-appeared, was gone the next moment
but in an instant more was again in sight, much further down the course, with a string of blue, and green, and red bathing caps in its wake.

To the crowd on the bank at East Lake, watching the race, it seemed as though the little maid with her hair down into a knot of Auburn, was not so much swimming, as bobbing through the water.
And, really, that is what she does do. Others swim in the recent carnival at East Lake, but 13-year-old Nora Stirling darted along like some little bird of the water.

Many swimmers use an adaptation of the old breast stroke, in which they dip their heads under water, when exhaling, and thereby gain speed and save energy.

LIKE A WATER BIRD.
But little Nora Stirling swims no new form of an old stroke. She has contrived a swimming method of her own which is for all the world like that of the water birds which perhaps you have seen as they dart under the water and re-appear some way from the point of their disappearance.
In the recent water carnival, she won the 50-yard dash for women, the quarter of a mile swim, the half mile swim, and the quarter of a mile swim, the half mile swim, and the quarter of a mile swim.

And, in the 50-yard dash and the half mile swim, she has never been urged, to her best speed. The time which she made in the recent carnival was not all to white; she is equal.
For, while the other swimmers did excellently, she was never forced to her greatest efforts and fell short of the best time of which she is capable.
As it is, this little 13-year-old girl holds a championship trophy for excellence in swimming. And, yet, she can far surpass the records that she sports at which she excels, and is not the sum of her accomplishments.

In fact, the number and variety of occupations at which she is adept is remarkable for one of her age.
Because of her liking for study,
she was first induced to take to swimming. At this time she was only eight years old, and her residence then, as now, was at East Lake. She began as other beginners, but by the end of the first year

she could swim round the lake.
NEVER FRIGHTENED.
During this first year, however,
her father took care that she should never be frightened, and saw to it that she first swam round the lake near the bank before venturing far into deep water.

One frequent mistake of swimmers
who are learning their first strokes is to go beyond their depth and lay themselves liable to danger. But during Nora Stirling's pupillage much care was taken to protect her from risk and from the chance of becoming frightened at the dangers of deep water.

The result is that she now has a confidence which even expert swimmers often lack. Few who swim well have any conscious fear of water. But they are well aware of the limitations of their skill, while,
upon the other hand, this little girl of thirteen swims as though she would never tire and as though she could reach any speed with that queer, bobbing up and down swimming stroke which she herself has originated or adapted to her needs.

Water to her is almost a natural element. She swims with nearly the same ease with which another walks. And this is due, first of all,
to her natural skill at swimming;
next, to her confidence, and, thirdly,
to the swim which she takes each morning and each afternoon
throughout the spring and summer
at East Lake.

SISTER EXCELS AT GOLF.
Her sister, Alexa Stirling, has won many cups at golf, although she is but fifteen years of age, and also takes easily to water sports.
But Nora has no liking for any outdoor swimming. Otherwise, she prefers her books, her drawings and her writing. The verses which she makes are cleverly put, and her playlets have point and wit.

The truth of the matter is that she prefers these intellectual pleasures even to a two-mile swim round
the lake. And she detests golf.
There is no companionship whatever between the two sisters when it comes to this good game. Likewise, they differ at dancing.

Nora, at eight, determined that dancing should be her vocation, and that writing plays, making poems and winning swimming cups should be incidental occupations. And, even now, when the winter comes,
she dances, when, upon a summer

the accomplishments in which women are more often taught.

Alexa, like Nora, the younger, has a liking for music and has much musical expression, but she has yet to take to play-writing and to versifying.

Altogether, they show the excellent results of a form of training of education. While in Europe they attended school for a short while, but, with this exception, their instruction has been received entirely through a governess, and has differed widely from the common school course of study.

They have aimed at thoroughness,
and time has been allowed for outdoor training as well as for indoor study. It is remarkable how much they have accomplished by this method and how well they have done all that they have attempted.
The difference between their training and that of other children has not been of the Richard Fever sort, where a system was adopted. Far from this, their time has merely been apportioned wisely;
they have attempted only a few studies or a few games at once, and have done these thoroughly.

One effort has been to discover

ARTIST PROVES THAT MAN CAN LIVE LIKE ADAM.

(Special Correspondence.)

SKOWHEGAN, Maine.—Joseph
Knowles, the Boston artist who went naked into the forest to prove that a modern civilized man can live like Adam, seems to be making good. Messages written by him on birch bark with charcoal and left where a guide could find them have kept the outer world in touch with him. And the latest messages show that he finished his second week in the woods without mishap, in good health, and with many of his plans for lodging, clothing,
food and hunting carried out successfully.

His most interesting adventure has been the killing of a bear without trap, gun, knife or spear.

Knowles dug a pitfall in the woods
by means of a rude wooden shovel roughly shaped with a stone axe.
The pit was deep enough to keep a bear from climbing out, and covered with dead branches, leaves and moss,
with fish placed on it for bait.

A year-old bear, drawn by the fish,
crashed through and was caught.
Knowles found him there next morning. But how to kill him?
The artist prodded him with a pole for a while, then got a stout club and beat the bear over the head with it. He narrowly escaped falling into the hole himself, but finally crushed the bear's skull. He lacked an instrument, however, to cut up and skin the bear, and at last reports faced the problem of inventing one.

His chief implement, a little stone axe, was made by lashing a wedge-shaped stone to a stick or means of twisted inner bark of a cedar tree.
The axe is used to strip more bark,
and with this material he has woven moccasins, a belt and a sort of chaps reaching to the waist and taking the place of trousers. He is making a shirt of the same material. Later he will make clothing of skins.

He lives in a permanent camp built of sticks withed together, with a birch bark roof and the chimneys studed with moss. Before the entrance he keeps a fire burning all night and banked during the day to save weighting—for that's troublesome when one has no matches. His bed is of fir boughs covered with moss and dry leaves. He has no bed coverings yet, but the fire keeps him warm.

He sleeps six hours at night and
two hours in the afternoon sun.
His food has been mostly smoked fish, berries, wild cherries and hazel nuts. He smokes his fish partly to preserve it, but also to satisfy his craving for salt. Because of this craving he has so far cared little for fresh meat.

Until his shirt is finished he is naked from the waist up. His arms and sides are considerably scratched, but his skin has become brown and tough. He has suffered from trying poisoning in his feet, caught before he began wearing his bark sandals. He finds the bark very soft and comfortable.

the natural tastes of both; and without listening to whim or fancy to allow both to follow their natural bent.

When Nora took as hearty a dislike to golf as Benvenuto did to music, swimming was found for a substitute. And so it has been in all that the sisters have attempted.
As a result, one excels at swimming, though she is but thirteen;
the other at golf, though she is but fifteen. And both are skilled in other accomplishments and, in addition, have the inestimable possession of good health.

THE TWO SISTERS.
As you see, a story which begins with one sister must also include the other. For each excels at one form of athletics, and each is skilled in

THE NEWEST AUTUMN NEGLIGEES

French Fashion Notes

FOR comfort and beauty in the evening hour that every woman should mark off on her day's calendar, the negligee has never found a rival. The newest autumn models are here showing charming new touches that have been woven into the train of gowns and are added now to the lounging robes. However, they can be added to in imaginative models made in your own sewing room.

The college girl will find these suggestions very attractive. They combine little expense with good style and will successfully take any woman into her boudoir or rest room in beautiful style.

Pale blue flannel or albatross is used for the first model, which suggests a dress in its general lines. It has a bodice with elbow-length sleeves cut on the kimono pattern. A crossed line at the front fastens at the side and a blue velvet ribbon encircles the waist. On this is a row of pink roses made of tulle. The sash is finished at the back with a bow. The set forms the collar and cuffs, which are edged with pleatings of the same.

A combination of plain and figured material is shown in the attractive oriental model. The Chinese coat has wide sleeves finished with pointed cuts of the silk embroidery. A front panel of the figured material extends from the square neck to the bottom of the jacket. The skirt is draped and gathered in under the jacket in a belt. The combination of pink and blue is used in this negligee, still showing the importance of these two colors in alliance.

A figured jacket, cutaway in line is used over a silk skirt. The broadened jacket has an edging of pink tulle with a velvet ribbon running through the center. A single button in a tulle ruffle fastens the sash. The attractive little hooded cap is of net, with a deep ruffle hanging at the back. A band of ribbon velvet is tied around the cap and ends in a bow at the back.

On the seated figure is shown a negligee of pale pink flannel. The bodice shows the crossed line in front and a double ruche of tulle edges the collar line and the elbow sleeves. Small hand-made roses of tulle are used along the center of the ruche. A violet-colored satin sash finishes the waist line, the ends tied at one side.

Openwork tulle trims the last negligee, again showing blue and pink in alliance. The surplusage is emphasized by crossed bands of tulle. The negligee is finished with a fullness at the cuff line. This is a very charming negligee, one that will suit the taste of the wearer who is looking for the latest in the line.

Glints of Fashion

CHIFFON flowers will be used upon evening dresses.

Rhinestones and jet ornaments are to play a prominent part at evening affairs this winter.

Tassels will be much in evidence on sashes.

Chinese and Japanese ornament will influence the popular taste this season—particularly in embroidered and beaded effects.

Alibon of black velvet is expected to be popular for all winter, especially if the bodice is of transparent material.

Hats with transparent muller crowns, known as "crownless hats," are really suitable for cool weather, but Dame Fashion is shunning them. They will probably be much worn with evening gowns. Some of the "brims" of "crownless hats" are the sheer crowns plainly show the style of hairdressing.

SOLVING THE SLEEVE QUESTION

Put Tucks Across the Seam

A Simple Angel Sleeve

Lace Attached to the Top Point

A Quaint Elbow Ruffle

Made of a Band of Lace

THE arm in a puzzling question mark is confronting you. How are you going to solve the problem of sleeves? The evening gown must have sleeves. There are varied suggestions of sleeve ideas. Take one or all and you will be successful.

On the sleeve of chiffon there is a decided fullness which forms a loose bag over the elbow, the greatest length at the outer line. On the inside seam is a group of pinch tucks run in parallel rows near the lower edge. This forms a flat sash at just the place where fullness would be ungraceful.

The pointed top of the white net sleeve forms a cap. To this is attached wide lace in a straight line at the top, the fullness gathered at the middle. An undersleeve of chiffon comes to the elbow.

In a quaint style is the sleeve entirely of lace fitted in at an armhole without fullness and ending in a band of ribbon. Over it hangs a short evening. It is shown in a chiffon point dropping down from the elbow. Over the chiffon is a band of lace draped up toward the back, the fullness pleated in on the undersleeve seam.

Fullness is apparent in many of the new sleeves, but it is far from the halcyon sleeve of fifteen years ago. The lines are soft, clinging and graceful, and the general beauty of the silhouette is enhanced rather than lessened. The long sleeve of chiffon, either fitted or in bishop fullness, will be used on afternoon gowns extensively.

Subtle, trimming of flippings and buttons and loops, modified seams and slashes, serve to decorate new sleeves. The importance of the sleeve as a contributing factor of a gown's beauty must not be overlooked by the dressmaker of either the home or of the largest establishment in a city. The sleeve is a part of the general scheme of a dress and should be considered in relation to the bodice, skirt, and the figure of the wearer.

A variety of styles insure beauty to all types. It is for you to choose the best for your own needs.

DAGMAR RASMUSSEN

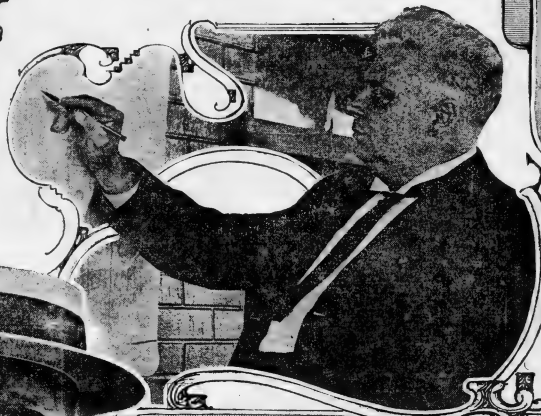

I have been trying to gather information in regard to coats for the street and evening wear for the coming season. At Paquin's the coats will be long and evening coats will be short. From the establishment of Bern's the wear will be that the short bolero will prevail for the street and that everything intended for evening wear will be long, sometimes training. It is a little confusing and one is in doubt as to what should be said. No far the abbreviations for long and short are not used. The new coats have been made with slightly longer shorter all summer. The newest ones have been made in utility lines with fur, the thin material being laid in broad tufts which go round the body, the garment being drawn in about their lower edge. The new coats are of dark colored chiffon or tulle and have a long and the like, and the lining is of a light color. The new ermine. Frame. White felt hats and those made of white plush have been worn for years, but more with them and sponge costumes in the morning. The felt is different from that used last year, the felt being soft with a soft nap over its surface such as one finds in the best qualities of undressed hid. It comes in all the shades of white, such as ivory, cream, and yellow. The shades that are the most popular are the cream and yellow. The shapes that are the most popular are the crown and the different varieties and little capots that have brims that drop slightly over the face. Some of these last turn up sharply in the back. The plush hats are made of the same material. The softening more pronounced. Wings or skirts turn down them and in some cases the wings or the hat depends upon the arrangement of 1930's popular trimmings.

Hush hats and cortical velvet are among the other offerings of this season. The last mentioned being entirely new and quite smart. The

THE photograph at the top of the page shows the wreck which occurred recently near Marietta as the result of a wash-out. The tracks popped in two as though the steel rails had been brittle wood, and the engine was given a bad fall and was left standing almost upright. Shortly after this wreck, a rear-end collision happened at Scottdale.

In the recent field day events held by the Atlanta club, Frank Manush had the proud distinction of finishing first in the sack race. You can see how proud he is by his smile. Was ever a smile more radiant or beaming?

THE man wearing the straw hat is Thompson M. C. Bram, who was paroled recently from the Atlanta federal prison after 17 years' imprisonment. He was convicted of murder committed aboard the bark "Florence Puller"; but at the time of his trial and upon his release recently he insisted upon his innocence. Bram, according to his own statement, has endured 17 years' imprisonment for another man's crime. But upon the day that he was set free from the Atlanta federal prison, he said, with an honest ring in his voice, that he harbors ill-will against no man, and simply asks the opportunity to live an honest life.

THE bathers in the upper right-hand corner of the page are Walter Dubard and Miss Regina Rambo. They were photographed at East Lake, just as they were going off the spring board, both at the same time. In this diving feat, the first have caught Dubard and Miss Rambo as each hit the water with a "ker-plash" that was simultaneous.

The group of four in the lower right-hand corner of the page are Atlanta boys who set out recently to walk to New York. They got only a part of the way, but at least they set out and continued undaunted until too many obstacles interfered. Reading from left to right they are: Jack W. Lipscomb, F. J. Lipscomb, L. W. Shead and Clarence Burel.
